NCAA reaches settlement in concussion suit

Chicago Tribune

The NCAA would embrace a new protocol to handle athlete concussions and spend millions of dollars to monitor former players as long as those athletes are barred from filing class-action claims in the future, under a proposed settlement announced in federal court Tuesday.

Described as a "commitment to student-athlete safety," the $75 million deal would also protect the NCAA from the type of costly settlement the NFL is currently negotiating with its retired players. And while former college athletes still could file individual personal injury suits against the organization, those claims don't typically carry the same power as class-action lawsuits.

"It was a trade-off," plaintiff's attorney Steve Berman said. "We thought it was in the best interest of the [group]."

U.S. District Judge John Z. Lee raised questions about the prohibition against the personal injury class-action when reviewing the proposed settlement Tuesday, and asked both sides for information before he issues a ruling.

The settlement would end litigation that began when a dozen college athletes—including former Eastern Illinois University defensive back Adrian Arrington—accused the NCAA of putting their health at risk by leaving concussion policies up to individual schools. The NCAA admits no wrongdoing in court documents filed, as it agreed to make small payments to the athletes involved in the litigation.

Arrington and three other former athletes each would be paid $5,000 for being deposed as part of the lawsuit, while eight others would receive $2,500 for being named plaintiffs. The players' lawyers would receive $15 million and up to $750,000 for expenses.

The NCAA also would contribute $5 million toward concussion-related research.

Critics described the deal as "worthless" and contended it does little more than offer additional diagnostic testing to former college athletes. It does not provide any medical treatment or financial assistance if the tests deem them to have concussion-related problems.

"It's going to benefit no one here in any real way except for the NCAA and the plaintiff's lawyers," said attorney Jay Edelson, who represents former Pittsburgh player Frank Moore and former San Diego State player Andy Nichols.

Neither player is named in the lawsuit that prompted the proposed settlement.

Under that proposal, the new fund would allow any athlete who played NCAA sports to get a free evaluation of possible concussion-related symptoms. The program would be available for the next 50 years to athletes regardless of when they played, what sport they played or how long they played.

About 700,000 eligible participants played college football, according to court documents. About 2 million former athletes were not involved in contact sports, though they still can receive testing for any head injuries they may have suffered during their collegiate careers.

The protocol would require the ex-players first to fill out a survey to see if they qualify for the evaluation. The evaluation results would be forwarded to their doctors, but the NCAA would not provide any recommended treatments. Instead, athletes would have to sue the organization or individual universities if they believed them responsible for their concussion-related problems.

Arrington, who contends he suffered five concussions during his college career, says the repeated trauma has caused him memory loss, migraine headaches, depression and seizures. He plans to file a personal injury claim against the NCAA, his attorney Joseph Siprut said.

Under the agreement, NCAA schools also would have to follow certain procedures when their players suffer head trauma. Athletes, for example, would not be allowed to return to action the same day they receive a concussion.

All players, coaches and trainers would receive concussion education. And doctors trained in concussion diagnosis would have to be present for all contact sports games.

The proposed settlement describes these guidelines as "significant changes to and enforcement of the NCAA's concussion-management policies," but many programs already have adopted these practices. The Big Ten conference, for example, instituted a nearly identical plan in 2010.

"It was the safest and broadest plan we could enact," Big Ten commissioner Jim Delany said. "It makes for a healthier game—and that is what everyone wants."

Ohio State football coach Urban Meyer said the proposed settlement would not require any changes to how his program responds to concussions.

"We evaluate every concussion we have and why," he said. "That's where I adapt. Practices are much different now than they were three years ago for us. ... We're already following what's been proposed."

Dates that are good in theory, not practice

Chicago's long winters tend to leave dating skills a bit rusty

Ah, summer—those three sun-kissed months when we can finally drag ourselves out of our Tostito burrows and spend some quality time trying to convince near-strangers that they should touch their mouths to our mouths.

Unfortunately, all those romantic nights in from October to June holed up with a bottle of wine and Chrome Incognito tabs may have left some of us a bit out of practice in terms of actual dating mechanics. "Now that I have danced upon and traded phone numbers with this Kristen Stewart lookalike, what's step No. 2?" we may wonder.

> "Unfortunately, all those romantic nights in from October to June holed up with a bottle of wine and Chrome Incognito tabs may have left some of us a bit out of practice in terms of actual dating mechanics.

Don't be fooled, friends. Much like the streets of the city themselves, though summer dating activities might seem to be brimming with possibility, in reality, they are still full of potholes. Be warned, then, that these wooing venues are not always the fun time rom-coms make them out to be.

1. Arcade bar

Expectation: You playfully hip-check your would-be significant other out of the way as the two of you waggle your joysticks to "Street Fighter." As she goes in for the K.O., she drops a kiss onto your cheek; distracted, you flush, and she yells in triumph as Ryu roundhouse kicks Chun-Li in the face. Later, you bang.

Reality: You spend two hours ignoring each other as you try to beat your own high score at "Addams Family" pinball.

2. Cubs game

Expectation: OK, so you're not that into baseball, but you figure, hey, there are worse ways to spend an afternoon than sitting in the sunshine and eating french fries, right? Plus, watching the way your honey's eyes light up as she describes Jake Arrieta's ERA is exciting enough. Later, you bang.

3. Street festival

Expectation: Your date laces his fingers into yours as the two of you watch Laura Stevenson kill it onstage. He scratches behind the ears of a particularly scruffy Jack Russell, and you think, out of nowhere, "A dog like that could be ours someday." Later, you bang.

Reality: So. Many. White. People. In. Flower. Crowns.

Reality: Beers are $9. Plus, your date gets so worked up about the Cardinals that she gets angry-drunk and pours a pitcher of Miller Lite into her own lap.

4. Brunch in the park

Expectation: Your date's a frugal person, and you appreciate that in a partner. So instead of braving the line for fried pickles at Handlebar, she shows up at Holstein Park with a basket full of vegan scones she baked herself and a thermos of mimosas. You read comics together on a blanket, occasionally brushing your calves together. Later, you bang.

Reality: Turns out it's kind of hard for two people to go through an entire bottle of champagne, and you get day-drunk and hungover at the same time. Also, you are so sticky from orange juice spillage that you don't want to touch your own body, let alone someone else's.

Honestly, the whole shebang almost makes you wish it were too cold to propose anything but Netfix marathons. Almost. KATE CONWAY IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. SHE ALSO WRITES FOR XOJANE AND STILL ENJOYS SUMMER DATING, DESPITE ALL OF THE ABOVE.

LAKEFRONT OF THE FUTURE

WHAT DOES A $1 BILLION MAKEOVER LOOK LIKE FOR NORTH LAKE SHORE DRIVE?

By Rachel Cromidas | REDEYE

IN THE FUTURE, North Lake Shore Drive could have a dedicated CTA bus lane, a light rail or miles of extra parks along the lakefront. At the very least, maybe that pedestrian tunnel at Chicago Avenue won't flood when it rains.

Over the next four years, city and state officials will be collecting, refining and studying suggestions for how to transform the 80-year-old Drive north of Navy Pier.

The redevelopment of North Lake Shore Drive could cost up to $1 billion and take more than a decade to complete, officials say. The city and state departments of transportation are collaborating on the nascent project with more than a dozen local community and urban planning organizations. So far, the Illinois Department of Transportation has received several hundred submissions on paper and about 70 more online, and will be accepting suggestions for this planning phase until Friday. About 340 people attended its second public meeting on the project earlier this month. The next public meeting is slated for summer 2015.

John Baczek, IDOT's chief of project and environmental studies, said IDOT is open to all suggestions, from hyperlocal complaints about a neighborhood's particular lakefront path entrance to pie-in-the-sky ideas, such as relocating Lake Shore Drive entirely.

"We've gotten very specific comments, like provide a roundabout at Bryn Mawr, to bigger picture things like adding more green space along the lakefront," he said. "Everything is on the table at this point."

The Drive sees nearly 69,000 transit users and 161,000 motorists per day, and the lakefront trail sees 31,000. Users often complain about vehicle congestion on the on/off ramps, hard-to-navigate curves and the sometimes disastrous commingling of pedestrians, leisure cyclists and commuters on the trail.

Chrissy Mancini Nichols, director of research at the Metropolitan Planning Council, said the project must be planned for not just what would improve the lakefront today, but what will still function a century from now.

"We're going to spend up to a billion dollars on this, maybe, so we need to make sure that we're designing this road to work for the next 50 or 100 years, and take into account how people 50 years from now are going to travel," she said.

Among other changes, Mancini Nichols said the redevelopment should focus on how to reduce the three-a-day crash rate on the Drive, regional plans to double transit ridership by 2040 and the potential use of infill to increase green space and widen the lakefront trail and beaches.

In the shorter term, Jessica Feld, 26, of Wicker Park, wants to see parts of the lakefront path, where she goes running, become safer for people on foot, who currently have to share a single lane with cyclists and roller-bladers.

"It's like playing Frogger," she said.

The Drive was originally conceived as a boulevard in a park, more like Logan Square Boulevard than the Edens Expressway. And John Norquist, the former mayor of Milwaukee and former president of the Chicago-based Congress for the New Urbanism, is most concerned that North Lake Shore Drive not be sped up beyond its 40-to-45 mile per hour speed limit.

Speeding the drive up, according to Norquist, would likely involve widening the lanes and lengthening the exit roads to be more freeway-like. These changes would do a disservice to the lakefront, increasing traffic and failing to make it easier to travel between North Side neighborhoods, he said.

"Edens is a freeway, it doesn't have any social duty like Lake Shore Drive," he said. "[The Drive is] meant to be aesthetically beautiful. It's meant to be connected to the neighborhoods. The more they try to accommodate traffic on Lake Shore Drive, the more traffic they'll get."

Increasing the speed limit is also not likely to benefit neighborhood economies, Norquist said. He pointed to Bronzeville as an example. It resides along a more freeway-like stretch of the Drive on the South Side but still exhibits slow economic development, he said.

John Krause, an architect and the founder of Chicago Streetcar Renaissance, a nonprofit that advocates for modern streetcar infrastructure, believes that adding a light rail line to the Drive would be safer and potentially cost-effective.

"It's pretty clear we want to discourage people from just driving through our town, but we don't want to discourage people from working here. So instead of measuring how many vehicles the roadway can move, it should be how many people it can move," he said. "It's very expensive to operate a transit system slowly."

Krause, a member of the project's task force, also formally suggested redesigning the Drive's pedestrian crossings so they rise up over the drive rather than tunnel under it, and shifting the location of the drive between North and Belmont avenues to west of the Lagoon behind the Lincoln Park Zoo, among other ideas.

Jennifer Jung, 39, of the West Loop, who was recently cycling near Ohio Street Beach with her husband and two-year-old daughter, said whatever the changes, she hopes they will mean less long-term construction along the lakefront.

"If they have to rehab it every few years, think of how much more of an annoyance that's going to be," she said. "It should be long-lasting change."

A BIT OF HISTORY

» 1860: Chicago bans burials along the lakefront, where the city had previously buried victims of cholera in the mid-1800s.

» 1865: Architect Swain Nelson created his plan for Lincoln Park. He oversaw construction of a lakefront drive that ran from Wisconsin Street to Diversey Avenue with his partner Olaf Benson.

» 1875: Olaf Benson became Lincoln Park's superintendent. He oversaw construction of the drive south of the park, from North Avenue to Oak Street, and developed more extensive plans for the park and its connected roadways.

» 1880s and 1890s: Wealthy property owners who followed hotelier and real estate developer Potter Palmer to the Gold Coast financed a seawall and landfill along Lake Michigan to extend the drive south of Oak Street.

» 1909: City Planner Daniel Burnham wrote in his "Plan of Chicago" that the Drive be envisioned as a "boulevard through a park" that would run from Jackson Park on the South Side up through Grant Park and into Lincoln Park.

» 1910: The Drive was extended to Belmont Avenue.

» 1911: The state Supreme Court declared that the downtown lakefront be "forever open, clear, and free of buildings."

» 1930s: The state government helped the Lincoln Park Commission build a new northern section of the drive between Montrose and Foster avenues.

» 1950s: The northernmost part of the Drive was extended again from Foster Avenue to Hollywood Avenue.

» 1973: The Lake Michigan and Chicago Lakefront Protection Ordinance was established to prevent city or state departments of transportation from turning the drive into an expressway by expanding the size of the lanes or adding more lanes.

» 1975: Friends of the Parks, a nonprofit, was established to preserve public park lands in Chicago, including the complete stretch of the lakefront trail, from Hollywood Avenue to 71st Street.

» 1987: Friends of the Parks won a lawsuit requiring that the drive continue to be held to the design standards of a boulevard, not an expressway, after seeing plans for expressway style ramps near Fullerton and Belmont avenues.

» 2003: South Lake Shore Drive was reconstructed between 67th and 23rd streets.

» 2012: City began construction on a 2-mile extension of South Lake Shore Drive from 79th Street to 92nd Street.

» 2012: City completed construction of the 31st Street Harbor on the near South Side, with plans for a $18 million footbridge at 35th Street.

» 2013: Planning for the North Lake Shore Drive redevelopment project begins.

Report: Crimes decrease on CTA

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

Mayor Emanuel and the CTA on Tuesday heralded a nearly 22 percent decrease in thefts and robberies on the CTA, the most common crimes reported on the system.

The announcement comes just days after Chicago police announced charges in the July 16 armed robbery of several riders on an Orange Line train headed downtown.

The CTA credited expanded police patrols, undercover operations targeting pickpocketers and 23,000-plus security cameras across the CTA for the decrease.

"There are a number of factors that can affect crime levels, but regardless of how you look at the numbers, it's clear that progress is being made," CTA President Forrest Claypool said in a release.

Still, fewer people are riding the CTA than last year. CTA ridership is down 3.4 percent systemwide January through April compared with the same period in 2013, according to April ridership numbers, the most recent CTA data available.

There were 166.8 million rides this year through April, compared with 172.7 million rides in 2013. Bus ridership, which accounts for about 55 percent of CTA rides, is down nearly 9 percent to 91 million rides. Rail ridership is up 4 percent to 75.8 million rides.

There is "no evidence that ridership is a factor" in the crime decrease, CTA spokeswoman Tammy Chase said. "Crime is down in far greater percentages than the modest decline in overall ridership year-to-date through April."

Record cold in January was also not a factor in the crime decrease, Chase said. "Crime fell at about the same rate in the second quarter of 2014 compared with the first quarter of 2014, which had far more severe weather, demonstrating the decline in crime has not been weather related," Chase aid.

Serious crimes and thefts were down 21.7 percent on rail and 22.6 percent on buses, Chase said.

Systemwide, there were 796 thefts in the first half of the year, compared with 975 in the same period in 2013. Robberies were down from 237 incidents last year to 154 incidents this year. Crime statistics were through June while the Orange Line robbery occurred in July.

The agency also saw fewer incidents of aggravated assault and battery.

CTA statistics show the last homicide on the system was in 2011, however a man was beaten to death on a Green Line platform in March 2013, according to police records.

After RedEye pointed out the death to the CTA, Chase said the transit agency is updating its statistics to include the slaying.

Chicago Tribune

A woman who says her Chicago plastic surgeon posted before and after photos of her facial reconstruction surgery on his website without her consent, labeling them "cocaine nose," filed a lawsuit Tuesday in Cook County circuit court.

Sabrina Kropp says Dr. Robert Walton took the photographs of her face in 2004, with the understanding that the images would be securely maintained in her medical record, according to the lawsuit. But when the doctor opened a new practice, Plastic Surgery Chicago LLC, in 2013, photos of her face were published on his practice's website, the lawsuit states.

The photographs were displayed and labeled as "cocaine nose," according to the lawsuit. "Cocaine nose" is listed on Walton's website as one of the nasal reconstruction surgeries he performs. It's described as "perforations of the septum, infection, loss of supporting cartilage, scarring and eventual collapse of the nose" that can occur after chronic cocaine use.

An attorney for Kropp could not be reached Tuesday night.

EXPRESS LINES

- The City Council Finance Committee on Tuesday endorsed a measure that, if approved by the full council Wednesday, would boost 911 surcharges on wireless phones and landlines by $1.40—to $3.90 a line.
- The park surrounding Chicago's historic Water Tower would be renamed "Jane M. Byrne Plaza" in honor of the former mayor under a proposal endorsed Tuesday by the City Council Finance Committee.
- Gov. Quinn on Tuesday signed into law a measure to put a nonbinding referendum on the fall ballot asking voters whether millionaires should be taxed at a higher rate. TRIBUNE

Twitter's user growth beats targets

5 Twitter's monthly active users rose a better-than-expected 24 percent to 271 million in the second quarter as the online messaging service mostly succeeded in stemming a dwindling pace of growth, sending its shares soaring almost 30 percent.

Airfares down 18 percent since 1995

Federal data released Tuesday show airfare prices barely have budged during the past year and are down nearly 18 percent since 1995 when adjusted for inflation, according to the U.S. Department of Transportation.

More sanctions for Russia

6 The European Union and the United States on Tuesday announced more sanctions against Russia, targeting its energy, banking and defense sectors in the strongest international action yet over Moscow's support for rebels in eastern Ukraine.

The measures mark the start of a new phase in the biggest confrontation between Moscow and the West since the Cold War, which worsened dramatically after the downing of Malaysian flight MH17 over rebel-held territory July 17 by what Western countries say was a Russian-supplied missile.

"If Russia continues on this current path, the costs on Russia will continue to grow," President Obama said in Washington. "Russia's actions in Ukraine and the sanctions that we've already imposed have made a weak Russian economy even weaker."

In Brussels, diplomats said ambassadors from the 28-member European bloc agreed to restrictions on trade of equipment for the oil and defense sectors, and "dual use" technology with both defense and civilian purposes. Russia's state-run banks would be barred from raising funds in European capital markets. The measures would be reviewed in three months.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel, who had been reluctant to step up sanctions before the crash because of her country's trade links with Russia, said the latest EU measures were "unavoidable."

The new measures were coordinated with Washington in the hope that Russian President Vladimir Putin will back down from a months-long campaign to seize territory and disrupt Ukraine, whose pro-Moscow leader was toppled in February.

But Putin has shown no sign of backing down. Western countries say the Kremlin has stepped up support for separatists by sending them more heavy weaponry, but Moscow denies it is arming the rebels.

On the ground Tuesday, intense fighting between government troops and pro-Russian rebels killed dozens of civilians, soldiers and rebels as Kiev pressed on with an offensive to defeat the Moscow-backed revolt.

8 Smoke rises Tuesday from the eastern part of Gaza City after Israeli air strikes pounded dozens of other high-profile targets. Israeli fire continued early Wednesday, killing at least 21 Palestinians as Egyptian mediators prepared a revised proposal for halting the conflict between Israel and Islamist guerrillas in the enclave. Sierra Leone's top Ebola doctor dies from virus

7 The doctor leading Sierra Leone's fight against the worst Ebola outbreak on record died from the virus Tuesday, the country's chief medical officer said.

The death of Sheik Umar Khan, who was credited with treating more than 100 patients, follows those of dozens of local health workers and the infection of two American medics in neighboring Liberia, highlighting the dangers faced by staff trying to halt the disease's spread across West Africa.

Ebola is believed to have killed 672 people in Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone since the outbreak began in February, according to the World Health Organization.

The contagious disease, which has no known cure, has symptoms that include vomiting, diarrhea and internal and external bleeding. The fatality rate of the current outbreak is around 60 percent although Ebola can kill up to 90 percent of those who catch it.

Ace of plates

Critics agree: Jake Arrieta's a Cubs rising star

By Matt Lindner | FOR REDEYE

Jake Arrieta is proving to be an ace in more ways than one for his Cubs teammates.

On the field, the right-handed pitcher has been one of the few bright spots in a depleted rotation. Off the field, he's the team's go-to source for restaurant recommendations.

"[My wife and I] tend to be pretty critical of food—not in a bad way," he said. "I like to tell [the team] about the restaurants I've discovered here, pass them along to them so they can experience them, take their families out for a nice meal."

The laid-back 28-year-old, who doesn't mention that he pitches for the Cubs in his Twitter bio, said the key to a good meal isn't necessarily the food itself, though that certainly helps.

"What I like to do is tell the server, 'Hey, we like to socialize the entire meal, so bring small plates every 10-15 minutes and we don't care what you bring, just keep the food coming,' " he said. "I feel like that's the best way to enjoy a meal, especially when you plan on telling stories and socializing throughout dinner. Avec and Nico [Osteria] are two places that allow you to have meals like that."

If his restaurant recommendations are as on point as his pitching, his teammates would be wise to heed his advice. In his first full season with the Cubs, Arrieta has established himself as their most dominant starting pitcher.

In 15 starts, Arrieta has compiled a 5-2 record with a sparkling 2.18 ERA and 99 strikeouts. He's also come close to throwing a no-hitter more than once. And to hear Arrieta tell it, he wouldn't be surprised if he put together a few more no-hit bids this season.

"The only thought process I have when I'm on the mound is executing each pitch as its own individual game, winning that pitch and winning the next pitch," he said. "If I'm able to execute 90 out of 100 pitches, I feel like I'll be able to be in situations like that, I wouldn't say on a regular basis, but I don't

> "What I like to do is tell the server, 'Hey, we like to socialize the entire meal, so bring small plates every 10-15 minutes and we don't care what you bring, just keep the food coming.' I feel like that's the best way to enjoy a meal."

SO CLOSE!

Carlos Zambrano was the last Cubs pitcher to throw a no-hitter, against Houston in 2008. That ended a 36-year no-hitter drought for the franchise, and Jake Arrieta is coming close to assuring Cubs fans that they don't have to wait that long for another. His next start is Thursday against Colorado.

ARRIETA'S LAST EIGHT OUTINGS

The right-handed pitcher has been on a tear since helping the Cubs to a 2-1 victory June 13 against the Phillies. Here's a look at how he's performed since that game:

Innings pitched	55.0
Hits	28
Earned runs	12
Strikeouts	64
Earned run avg.	1.96
Opp. batting avg.	.147

think it would surprise me at all if I'm able to do something like that a few times a year."

It's a far cry from where he was when he came to Chicago in July 2013 after a trade with Baltimore. At the time of the deal, his numbers for the Orioles were horrific (1-2, 7.23 ERA).

Since arriving at the Friendly Confines, it's been a different story. Arrieta has gone 9-4 as a Cub with a 2.71 ERA, firmly establishing himself not only as the ace of this season's rotation but as a franchise cornerstone. So what's been the key to his turnaround?

"Just really [being] able to clear my mind mentally and take charge of the things I've needed to focus on the most, really get better in those areas, refine certain things," he said. "At the end of the day, it's about knowing what I'm capable of doing and letting it out on the field."

With age comes maturity, after all.

"For me, it's taken some time to really understand which aspects of my game are most vitally important," he said. "A lot of it is through trial and error, a lot of it is through your failures that you have at this level. It's been a long, difficult process, but it's rewarding when you start to reap the benefits."

Despite all the expectations, Arrieta said he's not feeling any extra pressure.

"No, not at all," he said. "It's a position I've been in, in the past, and I kind of relish that opportunity, just that state of being a guy that your teammates can come to, younger pitchers can come to for a little advice."

Jake and his bike

By Matt Lindner | FOR REDEYE

Pay close enough attention the next time you see a bicyclist on the street and you might catch a glimpse of the Cubs' present and future flying by you. Ace starting pitcher Jake Arrieta bills himself on Twitter as a "Hippy-ish bike rider," and with good reason.

"I got into biking at a really young age," the 28-year-old right-hander said. "My family and I live in Austin, [Texas], which is a pretty big outdoor-based community. I just like to try and carry over those things I do in the offseason during the season."

On why he loves biking in Chicago

"I like to get out there, meet people and just see what the city has to offer. There [are] so many great areas. You've got Old Town, you've got Lincoln Park, Wicker Park, Wrigleyville. It's just nice to venture out a little bit, get to know the city."

On the extent of his obsession

"I've got a Dahon folding bike that I take with me on the road. It's got a bionics kit on it, which is an electrical pack that [lets you] use it as a standard bike or if you go on inclines or if you just want to casually cruise around town. It's a nice feature to have just to not really have to break a sweat on a hot day."

On the best road cities for cycling

"Boston is pretty high on my list because I'm a really big fan of the entire area, the Cambridge area, riding up and down Boylston and Newbury. Great weather there, especially during the season. Obviously anytime we're on the West Coast, those are always nice places to bike as well."

On how to stay safe on two wheels

"It's mainly knowing the biking laws and being aware of your surroundings. Not riding with your headphones in. Obviously you have to share the streets with the cars, and a lot of bikers tend not to realize that."

1	Peyton Manning is dancing at training camp. What will Jay Cutler do to top it?	Dance ballet en pointe. Such a graceful swan.	Hopefully throwing a LOT of touchdowns? FOCUS, BIG JAY, YOU VAN-DRIVING GLORY BOY!	Nothing. Because nothing tops Peyton Manning doing some sort of weird honky-tonk thing.	He will try leading the Bears to the BIG "Dance" in February.	As long as it doesn't result in a season-ending injury, he can do whatever he wants.
2	After one week of Team USA practice, Derrick Rose's knees will be ...	... the subject of their own "30 for 30," probably.	... as good as my responses to Five on Five! Well, except this one.	... JUST FINE, OK?	... begging for some love. Kevin Love, that is.	... better than ever, assuming "ever" means "since right before his first knee injury."
3	Um, who would pay $100K for a Johnny Manziel jersey?	His mom. I mean, she's got the money, right?	WHO TOLD YOU? OK, it was me. Look, I have a BIG issue with spending. DON'T TELL MY GIRLFRIEND.	Well, I would hope no one is that stupid, but this is Cleveland, so ...	Cowboys owner Jerry Jones. Since he wouldn't overpay for the man, he overpaid for the jersey.	Not me, but I wouldn't pay $100,000 for pretty much anything, so I'm far from the best point of contact on this.
4	Who's your go-to source for the best baseball trade rumors?	I only have time for Beyonce/Jay Z divorce rumors now, sorry.	Sean Ely. He's been 100 percent about this John Domanico kid.	I only have eyes for Chris Sosa.	Michael Jackson sang it best: "I'm starting with the man in the mirror!"	I'm not sure yet, but since I follow the Cubs, I have a couple of years until they're buyers at the deadline to figure it out.
5	Uh oh. The Detroit Lions tabled Ndamukong Suh's contract talks. You scared?	Nuh uh.	Nope! Anything to get him out of the NFC North, I'm all in for.	If he gets paid less, he'll take it out on Cutler. GIVE HIM ALL THE MONIES, DETROIT.	Legally I can't discuss anything involving a team from Detroit. White Sox fans might Suh me.	Why would I be scared? I'm not an opposing player he's trying to assault.

Ew, LeBron sweat

LeBron James is making it difficult to dislike him. While on a Nike-sponsored tour of Asia, James recently gave fans the clothes off his back. First, he took off his T-shirt, autographed it and handed it to a female fan holding a small child. Then he took to the stage and tossed his baseball cap into the crowd of about 2,000. He did the same with both shoes and his shorts, all of which he autographed before throwing them to the masses.

Lesson No. 1 from this story: Be careful with guns, and unload them during cleaning. Lesson No. 2: See Lesson No. 1. MMA athlete Joe Riggs learned this the hard way, as he will miss his next fight after an accident in his home Monday.

"While cleaning his permitted firearm [a pistol], the gun discharged, injuring his hand and upper thigh," the UFC said in a statement. "Riggs was transported to a nearby hospital in Arizona where he is being treated by physicians."

SKEWED PERCEPTION

By Andy Downing | FOR REDEYE

Courtney Barnett insists she's not funny and hasn't yet released a full album

Though Courtney Barnett was born and raised in Australia, the Melbourne-based musician has experienced more success stateside than in her native land, selling out a string of U.S. dates before selling out a single gig back home.

"It's kind of a funny situation," said Barnett, who performs Friday at Lollapalooza following a more intimate gig Wednesday at Schubas, by phone. "We've been playing around Australia for so long, and we still haven't really done our big, headlining shows here."

It shouldn't be long before her countrymen catch up with the rest of the world in appreciating the jangly, indie rock gems populating last year's "The Double EP: A Sea of Split Peas," a compilation album designed to whet appetites while the 26-year-old singer-songwriter puts the finishing touches on her full-length debut.

ANDY DOWNING IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. @REDEYECHIMUSIC

You titled this release "The Double EP." Did you want to make sure people didn't confuse this with a full-length album?
I guess that's why I called it "The Double EP," just to make it blatantly obvious to everyone. Lots of people still seem to confuse it a little bit, but at the end of the day, I don't care. People can call it whatever they want as long as they enjoy it and get something out of it.

Courtney Barnett
9 p.m. Wed. at Schubas, $15. 2:15 p.m. Fri. at the Grove stage at Lollapalooza in Grant Park, sold out. Watch at redeyechicago.com/barnett: "Avant Gardener" around to play whatever they could play. I think there were around 30 musicians who appeared on those songs.

From listening to "Avant Gardener" [a song where the narrator attempts gardening and ends up suffering a panic attack], I'm guessing the answer is no, but do you have much of a green thumb?
[Laughs.] Yeah, I do actually. That was just a bad day. I had [an elaborate garden] at home, but we had a really hot summer and I went away a few months, so I let it die for a bit. I'm going to redo it all eventually.

Is being known as a witty songwriter a double-edged sword? Do you feel any pressure to be witty in interviews?
No. [Laughs.] That's a funny question because I think I'm really [bleeping] boring. You know how there's people who are really funny at parties and have a crowd of people around them that laugh at all their jokes? I'm not that person. I'm a quiet, shy person who doesn't want to talk to anyone. There's the answer to your question.

Did that make it difficult to stand in front of people and perform these songs?
Yeah, that was a long process. I guess I started singing my own songs when I was 18 and was always super-shy and really nervous. Since then, I've been playing and touring ... and gaining confidence and finding my own thing.

You mentioned you read a lot growing up. What authors left a mark on you?
A big one when I was a kid was Roald Dahl. I liked that weird, slightly surreal thing, and I just love that all of his children's stories are so [bleeped] up. They're really nasty and quite violent, and I find it really funny [that] he writes these crazy stories empowering kids against their evil parents.

You've also talked about being a huge fan of biographies. Do you have a recent favorite? Why do you think you're so drawn toward them?
You know [Australian musician] Paul Kelly? He's got a great biography I read earlier this year. It's a really honest look into his life. It's interesting to hear about people's lives and what they do and what they go through. Everyone is doing the same thing, which is trying to get through life in whatever way they can, and it's interesting to hear how everyone faces it and how everyone interprets the challenge differently.

You've talked about writing 10 bad songs for every good one. What's the last bad song you wrote?
There are a lot. You have to write bad songs to get to the good ones, I reckon.

How do you know when you've hit on a good one?
Sometimes it takes a while to accept [a song is] OK. You sing it a lot around the house, and it just keeps creeping back. When I don't cringe at my own lyrics, I know I'm happy with them. It's a long process 'cause I'm a bit of a perfectionist. If there's even one word I don't like, it can throw the whole thing off.

The first full-length is done now, correct?
Yeah, we recorded in Melbourne just before we went overseas in April, and I'm trying to get it finished up and ready to release maybe later in the year or early next year. It feels like the next step for me. The songs and ideas are from the same place, but the sound is a bit more realized because we've spent so long touring and the one band recorded all the songs. With the 12 songs on the first two EPs, I got whoever was

Sir Michael Rocks

By Ernest Wilkins
REDEYE SOUND BOARD

In an alternate universe, Chicago rap duo The Cool Kids survives its insane hype in 2007-'08, avoids the "hipster rap" label that unfortunately followed the group at the time, cuts a classic album and stands atop the rap landscape as the best rap duo since Outkast.

What happened instead were record label conflicts and 2011's "When Fish Ride Bicycles" failing to hit as hard as it might have had it arrived a few years earlier. (The group's follow-up, "Shark Week," is expected later this year.) Now, less than four months after April's release of Chuck Inglish's solo record "Convertibles," we finally get "Banco," the first solo album from the other Cool Kid, Sir Michael Rocks (whose real name is Antoine Reed and who is now based in L.A.). It's both fascinating and puzzling.

There are moments of excitement, like lead single "Bussin' " (feat. Casey Veggies and Iamsu!) and the Blondie-sampling "Francois," and moments of fun creativity like "The Docks," an interlude that makes history as the only musical composition to feature both Do or Die's "Playa Like Me and You" and music from the underwater level of Super Mario 64. Rocks has a unique delivery; he might be the only rapper who can spit a line like, "My life like 'Kingdom Hearts,' my eyes good enough to see a fart" and not make me want him exiled to space. He's best when exploring unconventional topics.

Of course, when Rocks repeatedly spouts off cliches (taking your girl, getting laid all the live-long day, blah blah blah), he loses his impact. And while it's understandable to want a hit, when the result is a song like "Ain't Nothing Like"—which bites the by-now-stale sound of DJ Mustard-produced songs like YG's "My Hitta" or Ty Dolla $ign's "Paranoid"—the overall project suffers.

Still, when's the last time you heard a rapper take time to curse out SeaWorld on behalf of killer whales, as Rocks does on the appropriately named "[Bleep] SeaWorld"? If the song is a reference to "Blackfish," I applaud you, Sir Michael Rocks. It's about time someone addressed that on wax.

Shrimp taco at La Lagartija Taqueria

WORTH A TRIP

SHRIMP TACOS

La Lagartija, 132 S. Ashland Ave., 312 733 7772

By Michael Nagrant | FOR REDEYE

Returning from a vacation on either of the coasts or Mexico tends to result in a sad realization: Excellent seafood tacos are hard to come by in Chicago.

Some taquerias might have a fresh tortilla, superior slaw or a bright lime-infused cream sauce, but so many of them fail by offering insubstantial fillings of flavorless tilapia or once-frozen-and-then-fried shrimp bearing limp crusts sogged down by their toppings.

For this reason, I am happy to introduce you to the shrimp taco from La Lagartija (Spanish for "little lizard") taqueria in the West Loop ($3.50). Lagartija, owned by husband and wife Luis Perea and Laura Cid-Perea, is a sister restaurant to Bombon Bakery in Pilsen and the Bombon Cafes in Little Village and the West Loop. The Bombon locations were built on stellar fresh-baked special occasion cakes. If you've ever had Cid-Perea's superb, silky tres leches cake, it will probably come as no surprise that she and her husband also purvey some of the better tacos around.

Lagartija's plump shrimp are breaded with an airy Negra Modelo beer-splashed tempura batter that provides a satisfying shatter with every bite. The shrimp are topped with a lip-tingling habanero ketchup and a cooling, salty mayo blended with caper, olive and onion, and a nest of crisp lettuce and crunchy radish. The whole thing is swaddled in a hot hand-formed and griddled-to-order corn tortilla. Close your eyes, take a bite and you're suddenly whisked away to a beach-side beer-commercial ideal, whiling away the afternoon in an Adirondack chair.

DRINK THIS

GO AHEAD, TREAT YOURSELF!

Moody Tongue Cold-Pressed PawPaw Belgian ($5) at Beermiscuous

2812 N. Lincoln Ave. 855-450-2337

You don't have to be familiar with pawpaws—a fruit that tastes like a mango-papaya-pineapple hybrid—to enjoy this hazy, refreshing golden ale from new Pilsen brewery Moody Tongue. Brewer Jared Rouben worked directly with an Illinois farmer to grow the pawpaws, which impart a tropical flavor complemented by the beer's Belgian yeast. Despite the beer's cloudy appearance, it finishes crisply and clocks in at 5.5 percent alcohol by volume, making it perfect for pairing with food or summertime patio hangouts. Look for it on draft at restaurants and beer bars around the city.

Cosmic encounter

Playwright Kate Sprouse aims to spark difficult conversations with 'Half Price Cosmos'

By Julia Borcherts | FOR REDEYE

The cast of 'Half Price Cosmos' in rehearsal

Like many freelance writers, Kate Sprouse often works in coffee shops. And like most Americans, she was horrified when she heard the news about the Boston Marathon bombing—and disturbed when she began overhearing random coffee shop conversations that directed anger at entire groups of people based on a few individuals' actions.

Sprouse

The experience led the 35-year-old Chicagoan—who's worked as a bartender, teacher, nonprofit teen-empowerment advocate, ad agency copywriter and memoir ghostwriter in Brooklyn and Chicago—to explore her discomfort in a play. The result, "Half Price Cosmos," is a drama set in a bar—and leavened with some humor—about a diverse group of strangers' reactions to a terrorist bombing.

But how does a novice playwright go about producing her work professionally? Sprouse had been active in theater in high school and college but had not yet worked on a Chicago stage. So she enlisted production company Bread & Roses Productions and co-founding partner Lauren Girard Forster hooked her up with director Antoine McKay, whom you may recognize as a former Second City mainstage cast member and current recurring cast member on Comedy Central's "Review" with Forrest MacNeil. She then crowdfunded and invested her own earnings to finance facilities, equipment and salaries.

We called Sprouse during tech rehearsals to find out more about the play, its production and whether the "Cosmos" in the title refers to the universe or the "Sex and the City" cocktails.

Where the title originated: "I was maybe two days into writing and I met one of my friends out for a glass of wine. And they had a sign ... it said 'half-price sake' that night. And I just thought, half-price is such a 'bar' thing and [the play] takes place in a bar. And then later, I was reading that night in bed, something about the cosmos and how our understanding of it is so limited—it's logical chaos and we can't understand the way that things work, just a small segment of things. And I was a bartender for a long time, and I hated making cosmopolitans. And it just all came together."

'HALF PRICE COSMOS'
Go: 8 p.m. Thursday through Aug. 24 at the Athenaeum Theatre, 2936 N. Southport Ave.
Tickets: $30; $25 for students. 773-935-6875; athenaeumtheatre.org

But the title has caused confusion: "My mother's friends [were] like, 'Oh it's ladies with their martinis! It's the martini play! We're going to come see it!' ... I'm like, 'Oh, my God, her church group is going to not know what hit them [laughs] because it's not about the pink drink.' "

On working with director Antoine McKay: "On our first interview, we sat in this coffee shop and talked for two-and-a-half hours just about where he grew up, where I grew up, where we've felt victims of prejudice. And I'm a white chick with blond hair—I haven't experienced a whole lot of that. It really took me to be a teacher and ... when we'd go on field trips ... the way we got eyeballed and the way I would see people react on the street was appalling. And to sit with Antoine and share these stories and be able to openly talk about and joke at each other and be like, 'From the "peach" world, this is what I see;' and he's, 'From the "brown" world, here's what I see'—I think we've been able to foster that feeling of openness and conversation that we have at rehearsals about the real topics of the play because he and I are in a good place and can talk about that stuff."

How living in New York gave her the courage to identify as a playwright: "There's a different mentality there. You hang out at a party and people are doing the strangest things and nothing is outlandish. Like, 'Oh, yeah, I'm sculpting with marshmallows.' And people are like, 'That's really awesome. Good for you.' And I think it was really great to live in that environment for a little while. The difference about Chicago and New York, though, is that in New York, good luck and God bless you if you actually want to try to get it to fruition. Whereas in Chicago, there's been a lot of challenges ... but the community is so warm, especially in the smaller communities outside of the big theaters—people just wanting to support you, like, 'This is a good story. We want to help you get it to the stage.' "

THREE TO PLAY

BY RYAN SMITH | FOR REDEYE

Shovel Knight
Nintendo 3DS, PC, Wii U

Though shovels seem more suited for digging holes than battling evil, that doesn't stop the title character of this nostalgia-infused indie game. Shovel Knight uses his mighty home-improvement tool to bash bad guys and as an ingenious way to jump off their heads like a pogo stick. It's a new kind of weapon tied to a game that harkens back to its 1987-era influences, with 8-bit-style graphics and side-scrolling action that blends "Super Mario 3," the "Mega Man" series and other NES classics. Likewise, it also features those games' considerable charms and a few nagging weaknesses.

Enemy Front
PC, PlayStation 3, Xbox 360

It was just released this month, but nearly everything about "Enemy Front" screams 2007. The mid-aughts saw a glut of World War II-themed shooters, and while this one pays more attention to the underrepresented theaters of war (Poland, Norway), it still feels like a poor man's version of old "Call of Duty" games. Calling the visuals rough is generous, and there's a long list of bugs, quirks and glitches that mar an already-subpar experience. First-person shooters are a dime a dozen, which means "Enemy Front" may be headed for the bargain bin soon.

Swords and Poker Adventures
iPhone/iPad

Imagine this scenario: A sword-wielding warrior charges at a fearsome creature—but instead of mano-a-mano combat, man and monster each pull up a chair and decide their fate with a game of poker. Believe it or not, all the battles in this iOS puzzle game consist of creating poker hands using the cards you're dealt and nine trump cards on the table. The stronger the hand, the more damage you'll deal in the form of a loss of chips until you or your opponent go bust—which means death. Yep, the premise of "Swords and Poker Adventures" is plainly ridiculous, but that doesn't make it any less addictive. The game's creators unfortunately try to take advantage of this with a stingy pay-to-play system that will have you reaching for your wallet more than a bad luck trip to Las Vegas. TODAY IN THE YEAR ...

1619: The first representative assembly in the American colonies met in Jamestown, Va. (It enacted laws against idleness, drunkenness and gambling.)

1880: Robert McCormick, who would become the editor and publisher of the Tribune, was born in Chicago.

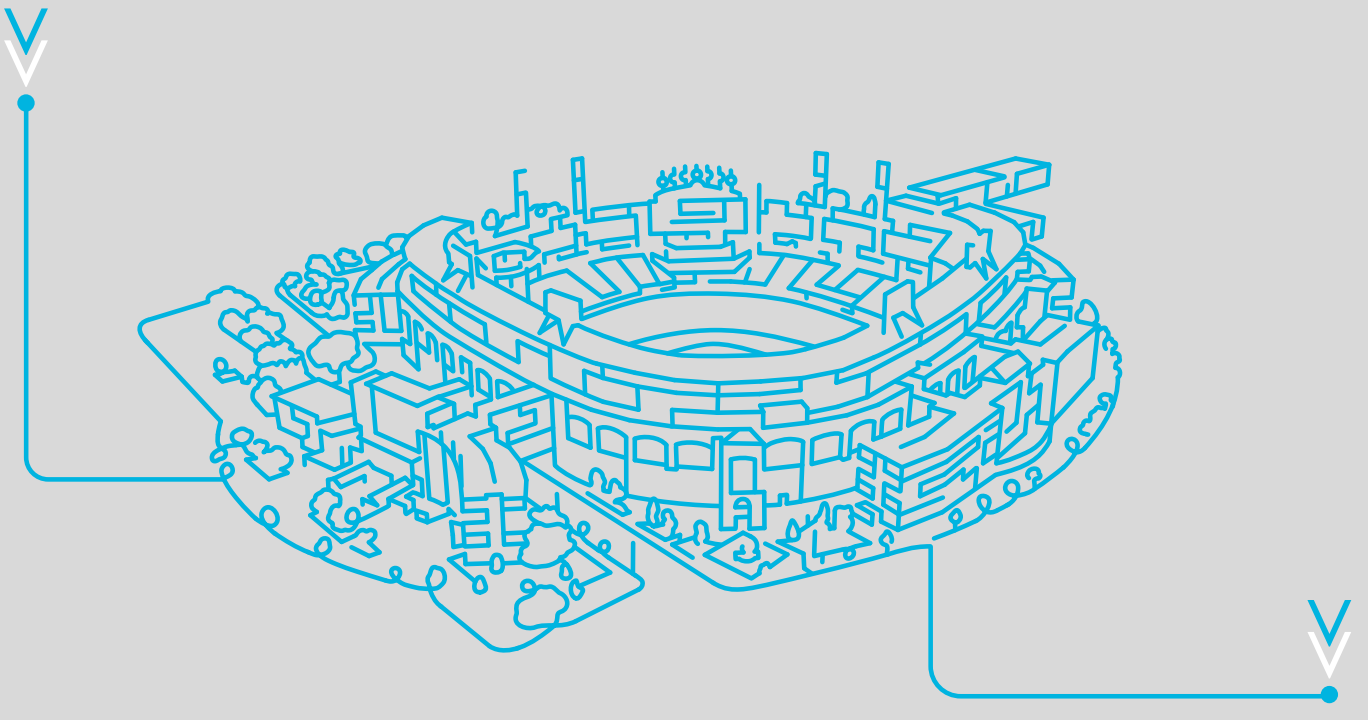

1975: Outside a suburban Detroit restaurant, former Teamsters union President Jimmy Hoffa was seen in public for the last time.

It's been years since we've heard new material from Hilary Duff, so we just assumed the "Laguna Beach" theme songstress was either A) busy being married to a hockey player or B) dead. Fortunately for Le Duff, the answer was A. But this week, the artist formerly known as Lizzie McGuire released her first song in, wow, seven years. The video for "Chasing The Sun" is fabulous because it contains the following: a caged hamster as a metaphor for Hilary being trapped in her cubicle, Hilary pouring sugar into a cocktail in her break room, postcards coming to life and a crocheted bathrobe.

However, it can't rise above the bar set by teen Hilary and her band of sugary contemporaries. Take a trip back in our bubblegum time machine and see if you can match the early '00s pop lyric to the starlet who sang it. Yes, Lindsay Lohan released music.

1 "So baby come to me/Show me who you are/ Sweet to me/Like sugar to my heart."

2 "Let the rain fall down/And wake my dreams/ Let it wash away/My sanity."

3 "He was a boy/She was a girl/ Can I make it anymore obvious?/ He was a punk./She did ballet./ What more can I say?"

4 "Daughter to father, daughter to father/ I am broken but I am hoping."

5 "If I could fall/ Into the sky/ Do you think time/ Would pass me by?"

6 "I'm like an alley cat/ Drink the milk up, I want more/You make me wanna/ You make me wanna scream."

How to eat fried worms

What would you want to do on a wilderness getaway with Zac Efron? Eating worms probably isn't at the top of the list. But there we were Monday on NBC's "Running Wild with Bear Grylls," watching the two gentlemen compose and consume earthworm omelets in the Catskill Mountains. Fortunately, because America is a great country, we also get to see plenty of shirtless Zefron and hear him say smart stuff like, "Should've packed my junk better." The full episode is available online if you're so inclined.

The other 'Sharknado'

Oh, Rob Lowe, why must you take your career so seriously? The "Parks and Recreation" star is front and center in new promos for Discovery's Shark Week, which kicks off Aug. 10. There's a green-screened windsurfer. There's a bunch of fake seagulls. There's Rob as a lifeguard riding on the back of two sharks. Hopefully the whole thing doesn't evolve into an hourlong special.

The Situation

What's the big deal?

The Situation has done the crime (getting into a fight outside his Jersey tanning salon), now he's got to do the time. The "Jersey Shore" star cut a plea deal and was ordered into 12 weeks of anger management, the Associated Press reports. His assault charge may be downgraded in three months when the court reconsiders the case. Good luck, bro.

Out of this galaxy

There's a lot of things "Star Wars: Episode VIII" director Rian Johnson can't tell you about the new movie—including why he was hired. "I can only assume it was a clerical error, like in the movie 'Brazil.'" Johnson joked at a taping of the Filmspotting podcast. He added that his preferred viewing order for the current six films is to watch the original trilogy first, followed by those OTHER ones. Or you can just skip those three and go get ribs, which is our plan.

THE DIGIT

Viewership for the two-hour "Bachelorette" finale Monday night was down 27 percent from last season's final episode, thr.com reports. Guess people just weren't that excited about forced romance this time around—or maybe they were watching "I Wanna Marry 'Harry'" online? Nah.
